The Arts and Crafts Movement originated in Britain during the late 19th century and was characterized by a style of decoration reminiscent of medieval times. The primary artist associated with the movement is William Morris, whose work was reinforced with writings from John Ruskin. The movement placed a high importance on the quality of craftsmanship while emphasizing the importance for the arts to contribute to economic reform.

Behrens started his career as a painter, illustrator and book-binder but would eventually become an artistic consultant for AEG (Allgemeine Elektrizitäts-Gesellschaft, literally General Electric Company). His career at AEG started in 1907 and there he designed a wide range of materials for the company including a logotype, product packaging and various publicity materials. The work he did there is of significant note because it is generally recognized as the first fully developed corporate identity, much preceding the corporate identity heydays of the 1950s and 60s.

Art Nouveau was an artistic movement which peaked in popularity between 1890 and 1905 which was practiced in the fields of art, architecture and applied art. It is a French term meaning "new art" and is characterized by organic and plant motifs as well as other highly stylized forms. The organic forms often took the form of sudden violent curves which were often referenced by the term whiplash. Its short success was a reaction against the late 19th century

The Poster was one of the earliest forms of advertisement and began to develop as a medium for visual communication in the early 19th century. They influenced the development of typography because they were meant to be read from a distance and required larger type to be produced, usually from wood rather than metal. The poster quickly spread around the world and became a staple of the graphic design trade. Many artists as well, such as Henry Toulouse-Latrec and Henry van de Velde, created posters.

A major player in the foundation and promotion of the Art Nouveau movement in Belgium, Henry Clemens van de Velde was a painter, architecture and interior designer. He came across the work of Van Gogh at the yearly exhibition of "Les XX", a Brussels based group of artists, and his work shows an influence of the Dutch painter. However, in 1892 he abandoned painting in favor of furniture and interior design. He also made significant Futurism was not only an art movement but also a social movement that developed in Italy in the early 20th century. Futurists were well versed and practiced in nearly every field of art including painting, ceramics, sculpture, graphic design, interior design, theater, film, literature, music and architecture. It was a movement that particularly despised not just certain aspects of classical antiquity, but everything that was not totally new.
